

Acknowledgements

This teaching kit was developed by the Division of Education of the Philadelphia Museum of Art to complement the exhibition African Art, African Voices: Long Steps Never Broke a Back (on view October 2, 2004–January 2, 2005) and to serve as an ongoing curriculum resource. The kit includes image cards of ten objects from the exhibition, with information on the reverse; slides and postcards of the ten objects; additional information and teaching strategies contained in this book; and a CD of related African music. The Delphi Project Foundation, The Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation, and The Jesse Ball duPont Fund provided generous support for the development of these materials.

The original exhibition was organized by the Seattle Art Museum and was on view there in spring 2002.

An advisory group of teachers and professionals guided the selection of the objects and contributed ideas to the writing and curriculum connections. I am particularly grateful to Toyin Ajayi-Frankel, who graciously provided her considerable firsthand knowledge of Africa and professional expertise to the development process, always in a timely fashion. Members of the advisory group included:

Toyin Ajayi-Frankel, Young Audiences, Philadelphia
Angela Allen, Sumner Elementary School, Camden, N.J.
George Barrick, AKWD Preschool, Philadelphia
Pat Mitchell Doe, Tilden Middle School, Philadelphia
Sue Dyke, University of Pennsylvania Museum of Archaeology and Anthropology, Philadelphia
Cathy Hensford, Reynolds School, Philadelphia
Eileen Kamison, Germantown High School, Philadelphia
Pam Lawton, Tyler School of Art, Temple University, Philadelphia
James Maikweki, University of the Arts, Philadelphia
Jimmy Mance, Lingelbach School and Jackson School, Philadelphia
Mtukufu Mthmaini, Heston School, Philadelphia
Annette Sample, George Washington Carver High School of Engineering and Science, Philadelphia
Christina Whitt, Franklin Learning Center High School, Philadelphia
Jean Woodley, Philadelphia Regional High School, Philadelphia

Mimi Kirk, intern for the African Art, African Voices exhibition at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, was an extraordinary and exemplary collaborator in the research, writing, and editing phases of this project, and her contributions are substantial. Marla Shoemaker, Senior Curator of Education, lent her outstanding editing skills, and John Zarobell, Assistant Curator of European Art before 1900, provided enthusiastic and informed counsel. Tammy Salvadore, Director of the Delphi Project Foundation, was an active and appreciated presence at the teacher advisory meetings. I am grateful to my colleagues in the Division of Education who offered information, support, and suggestions on an ongoing basis: Mindy Nguyen-Balli and Rebecca Hoenig.

Andrew Frankel's unique and extensive knowledge of African music and musicians made possible the informed selections of African music for the CD, and he skillfully arranged for the permissions. Anne Ladenson of Disc Makers in Pennsauken, N.J., generously contributed production services.

In the Department of Editorial & Graphic Design, Erika Remmy, Associate Editor, expedited the editing process, Robin Brown, Senior Graphic Designer, created magnificent layouts, and Heather DeRonck, Production Manager, ably coordinated the production of the project.

Bay Hallowell

Coordinator of Special Projects, School & Teacher Programs

African Art, African Voices: Long Steps Never Broke a Back was organized by the Seattle Art Museum with generous funding provided by Washington Mutual.

The exhibition was also supported by generous grants from The Pew Charitable Trusts and The Jessie Ball duPont Fund, and by the Robert Montgomery Scott Endowment for Exhibitions at the Philadelphia Museum of Art. Additional funding was provided by The Neubauer Family Foundation and the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts/Pennsylvania Humanities Council. Promotional and media support was provided by The Philadelphia Tribune and NBC 10 WCAU. The audio tour has been made available to visitors without charge through the generosity of Target Corporation.